Academic Section

In order to create a conducive academic atmosphere at LCWC, we have established an Academic Section. LCWC Academic Section is mainly responsible for the organization and promotion of academic activities at LCWC. Moreover, Academic Section provides personal academic development to, and suggestions for, our college students.

Chinese Mathematics Competition

The 16th Chinese Mathematics Competition concluded successfully.

Our college student Mr. Ng Wang Heng, who is a first-year student of Department of Mathematics in FST, excelled in the competition, winning the first prize in the Mathematics B Group under the supervision of Professor Chao Kuok Fai, the Associate Master of Lui Che Woo College. The Chinese Mathematics Competition is organized by the Chinese Mathematical Society and serves as an important platform for cultivating mathematical talent in Chinese higher education. The competition aims to stimulate students' strong interest in mathematics, enhance their overall competence, and promote innovation and development in mathematics education. Since its inception in 2009, the competition has been successfully held sixteen times, becoming a significant stage for students to showcase their mathematical talents and exchange academic ideas.

Mathematical Modeling

We're proud to announce all six LCWC teams (18 students) earned "Successful Participant" awards in the 2025 Interdisciplinary Contest in Modeling. Remarkably, most participants had no prior math modeling experience and came from non-mathematics majors. Their achievement demonstrates exceptional growth in applying mathematical skills to real-world problems.

This marks our second successful participation, building on last year's debut. The students' dedication in developing analytical abilities highlights LCWC's interdisciplinary learning environment. Their progress from beginners to award-winners is truly inspiring. Congratulations to all participants! This accomplishment sets a strong foundation for future problem-solving endeavors.

MS Office Skills Workshop

Our Academic Section organized a practical MS Office Skills Workshop, where resident tutors delivered systematic training to help students master essential Word, Excel, and PowerPoint techniques. Designed to boost academic efficiency, the workshop covered document formatting, data analysis, and presentation design—critical skills for surviving bachelor studies.

Participants gained hands-on experience through tailored exercises, equipping them to tackle assignments and research projects more effectively.

The workshop reflects LCWC's commitment to supporting students' academic success with real-world tools.

Silver-haired Seniors Experience Intergenerational Learning

Lui Che Woo College hosted an intergenerational learning activity on 3 April 2025, welcoming a group of elderly visitors from the Taipa Lago Integrated Service Centre of the Macao Federation of Trade Unions. The group, the oldest of whom was nearly 90 years old, experienced university life under the guidance of LCWC student volunteers.

Desmond Lam Chee Shiong, college master of LCWC, said that the activity went beyond traditional campus tours. With the concept of 'intergenerational learning', it would allow young people to learn from seniors while seniors would experience modern university life from the perspective of young people. The activity would not only connect the college and the community, but also build bridges between generations. The college also plans to run regular intergenerational learning activities to promote social care and life education.

The activity featured a variety of activities, including campus tours, interactive workshops, and communal meals, allowing participants to get a taste of life as a college student and learn about the educational philosophy of the residential college. In addition, a certificate presentation ceremony was held during the activity, where the participants received certificates in graduation gowns.
